Summer Schools, Normal and Training Schools Will Welcome WRITING THROUGH READING

A Book of Exercises, by Robert M. Gay, Professor of English, in Simmons College. While its brevity makes the book particularly serviceable for these schools, it is admirably adapted for supplementary work in fourth year high-school classes and college courses. The busy man or woman who is interested in self-education will find WRITING THROUGH READING a practical book to use without the aid of a teacher. 90 cents, postpaid.

THE LIGHT—An Educational Pageant

Is another Atlantic success. The presentation of this pageant in Cleveland, Ohio, during the recent meeting of the National Education Association, made a profound impression upon some of the most prominent educators in the country, and it has been pronounced an unqualified success from every point of view. The interesting and powerful lessons in Americanization make this pageant eminently adapted for Decoration Day entertainments and for school commencement exercises. It also contains other messages which fit it for use at any season of the year. 65 cents, postpaid.

Hitchcock's Junior English Book

By A. M. HITCHCOCK, Hartford Public High School

442 pages, 12mo, $1.24

THIS book, intended for what Mr. Hitchcock calls "the critical but somewhat neglected eighth and ninth years," is unlike anything that has yet appeared. The Preliminary Tests idea is new. So also is the scheme of having ten practically independent courses, each a combination of composition tasks and drill exercises. The plan of condensing English grammar into 100 pages of essentials, with many useless technical terms omitted and the emphasis placed upon correctness—attention directed to common errors—is at least newish. The courses entitled "Making up One's Mind" and "Convincing Others" represent an entirely new treatment of what is commonly called argumentation, a treatment appropriate for immature minds.

English—A Tool in Everyday Affairs

This is the foundation on which the Briggs and McKinney First and Second Books of Composition are based. English, not as an isolated end in itself, but as the means of conveying ideas from one mind to another.

A new conception of composition? Yes, and a remarkably successful one in stimulating the interest of high-school pupils.

For the Pilgrim Tercentenary

AUSTIN'S

STANDISH OF STANDISH

Dramatized by Annie Russell Marble

As the time of the Pilgrim Tercentenary draws near, this little play, based upon Mrs. Austin's story, will be found especially well adapted to schools which are looking for some way of observing the event. It portrays vividly life in Plymouth Colony and shows, as no formal history can, the sturdy faith and practical achievements of these pioneers of American liberties. The play is adapted for use by pupils in the upper grades or high school. The acting rights are strictly reserved by the authors and publishers, to whom application for possible use should be addressed. Riverside Literature Series No. 217. Paper 28 cents.

Music and the Drama

"A Sonata of Beethoven demands as much attention as does a play of Shakespeare."—
DR. CHARLES H. FARNSWORTH, Columbia University, New York.

Music is the handmaiden of the Drama. It is needed for Songs, Dances, Episodes, and often for Complete Background. "Music can take up the author's meaning at the point where the words cease to be effective."—PROFESSOR JACK R. CRAWFORD, Yale University, New Haven, Conn.

Songs

(Vitalize the study of lyric poetry with its musical setting)

- A 2406, "Under the Greenwood Tree," for "As You Like It," Shakespeare.
A 2535, "Sweet and Low," for dramatization of "The Princess," Tennyson.
36907, "Ave Maria," Schubert, for dramatization of "The Lady of the Lake," Scott.

Dances

(Interpretative dancing gives beautiful atmosphere to any play into which it can be fitted)

- A 3047, "Today's the First of May," Folk-dancing.
A 3079, "Sir Roger de Coverley," Virginia Reel.
A 5857, "Dance of the Hours," from "La Gioconda," for Interpretative Dancing.
A 5860, "Two Spanish Dances," from "Carmen," for Interpretative Dancing.

Incidental Music

(Appropriate incidental music provides wholesome emotional reactions in any play)

- A 6020, "Spring Song," Mendelssohn.
A 5649, "Melody in F," Rubinstein.
A 2517, "Traumerei," Schumann.
A 2779, "Souvenir," Drdla.

Classroom Study

(Compare the structure of the symphony with the dramatic structure of a play. The exercise is unique)

- A 5748, "Symphony in B Minor," Schubert.
A 5537, "Orpheus in Hades," Offenbach.
A 5954, "Andante from the Fifth Symphony," Beethoven.
A 6129-6130, "William Tell," Rossini.

Junior High-School English

An easy road to correct English

THIS new three-book series, for grades 7 to 9, is unique in plan, practical in content, and attractive to classes. It is based on the author's successful experience, and presents the topics from the point of view of interest and utility. The pupil is first shown the value of certain kinds of knowledge and is then given clear and simple lessons with an abundance of practice until the topic is mastered. The plan motivates efficiency.
